

Teachers Undergo Special Training To Instruct Students On Live-Saving Skills

January 18, 2019 | 3:32 pm

A group of teachers from four different schools within the Newfoundland and Labrador English School District are in St. John's today for CPR and defibrillator training.

By the end of the day, the teachers will be trained as instructors so they can teach their students CPR, defibrillator skills and heart-health knowledge through the ACT (Advanced Coronary Treatment Foundation) High School CPR and defibrillator program.

Ben Murphy

@BenMurphyVOCM

A group of 10 teachers from four different schools are doing CPR Training this morning to bring back to teach to their students. @VOCMNEWS

35 10:42 AM - Jan 18, 2019

See Ben Murphy's other Tweets

The training will result in 1,000 students from Baltimore School, Brookside Intermediate, Holy Spirit High School and St. Peter's Junior High leaving school with the skills and knowledge to save lives.

96 defibrillator training mannequins and 13 training units were also donated to the schools through the ACT foundation and Vale Mining Company, a supporter of the ACT programs.

Brian Malone, a Physical Education teacher at Brookside Intermediate says it's never too early to learn how to save a life. He